DIET FOR NEW AMERICA

I watched and enjoyed John Robbins' DIET FOR A NEW AMERICA. Since I do not have the equipment for videotapes, is there any other way of getting the information from the show?

A.B.
Akron OH

The television program you watched is based on John Robbins' book of the same name. You should be able to find it or order it from most local bookstores or natural foods stores.

DIET FOR A NEW AMERICA repeats Sunday, February 23 at noon. -Ed.

SHINING TIME STATION

My three-year-old son loves SHINING TIME STATION. We even had a Thomas the Tank Engine Christmas this year. Why have you taken it off the air?

T.P.
Alliance OH

Here's the deal. PBS wants to premiere two new children's series this year. One, LAMB CHOP'S PLAY ALONG, started in mid-January. That series will be replaced by BARNEY & FRIENDS in April. Shari Lewis and Barney have done extraordinarily well in video sales, so PBS commissioned the production of these two new series.

SHINING TIME will return in June. Yes, I know, try telling that to a three-year-old.

We hope your children will give these new shows a chance. One parent called five minutes into the very first episode of LAMB CHOP and announced, "My kid hates this show." A "chance" is longer than five minutes and shorter than, say, a month.

We know SHINING TIME is very popular and we're anxious to bring it back. It's just not possible right now. -Ed.

FRUG RECIPES

Please send information on where I can write for recipes used in THE FRUGAL GOURMET. I recently watched a show on Hungarian cooking. My grandmother used to make several of the dishes he prepared.

W.S.
Wadsworth OH

Individual recipes from the series are not available. They are collected in various books by Jeff Smith. In this particular case, you'll find the Hungarian recipes in Our Immigrant Ancestors. If you can't afford the book, try your local library.

Remember, too, that THE FRUGAL GOURMET airs twice on Saturdays — 11 a.m. and 6:30 p.m. If you see something you like in the morning, you can catch it again in the early evening. -Ed.

A LETTER OF PROTEST

I write to protest the way AUSTIN CITY LIMITS has been scheduled on Channels 45/49. I suspect that this show is slotted for cancellation given the subtle but steady move from Saturdays at 3 p.m. to Thursdays at 10 p.m. and now to Fridays at 12:15 a.m. In other words, one of your best programs is being scheduled into oblivion.

One of the main reasons I became a member of Channels 45/49 was because of ACL. My husband and I are both musicians and are very weary of the lack of musical variety on television and radio. ACL offers a veritable smorgasbord of southwestern musical styles, such as zydeco, progressive bluegrass, bluegrass, rockabilly, Mexican styles, cajun, Texas swing, honkytonk, folk, rock, and, oh, yes, country.

J.F.
Kent OH

Sorry we can't run your letter in its entirety, but we hope these selections from it represent your concerns adequately.

While AUSTIN CITY LIMITS has been moved to a less accessible time slot, it will not be canceled. We, too, think it is a high quality show. But it has been moved because the show attracts so few people.

Your letter points out the very problem with the series. In bringing so many musical styles to the show, ACL confuses and frustrates many viewers. A country-western fan may dislike cajun music. A progressive bluegrass fan doesn't necessarily like rock. It's hard to develop a regular audience under these circumstances. The show's eclectic mix may be music to your ears, but most viewers require more consistency from the shows they watch. For instance, LAWRENCE WELK fans are never surprised; they get the same kind of music every week and wouldn't want it any other way.

Originally ACL was a showcase for country-western music. It has moved away from this, and as you point out, is now a "veritable smorgasbord." That's fine for a buffet, but not so hot for a television series. - Ed.

B est Bets

February is Black History Month, and Channels 45/49 are offering several programs to celebrate. Best Bets covers only a few of the specials. Check our Daily Listings for many more.

NATIONTIME: GARY

Held in Gary, Indiana, in 1972, the First Black National Political Convention brought together the entire hierarchy of black political life in America. Ten thousand delegates from every state of the Union, representing every part of the political spectrum, attended the week-long conference. Their purpose: to celebrate the hard-won gains of the Civil Rights revolution, to define long-range goals and to hammer out strategies designed to achieve greater political empowerment in a society where democracy was not yet a full reality.

Narrated by Sidney Poitier and Harry Belafonte, NATIONTIME: GARY tells the story of this historic meeting through the recollections of Jesse Jackson, Amiri Baraka, Charles Diggs, Dick Gregory, Coretta Scott King and many others. The special airs Sunday, February 2 at 2 p.m. and Monday, February 10 at 9 p.m.

FRAMING THE PANTHERS IN BLACK AND WHITE

Variety magazine says FRAMING THE PANTHERS IN BLACK AND WHITE "brings to life a tumultuous chapter in American history... it's impossible to ignore." The special airs Wednesday, February 5 at 10:30 p.m. and Sunday, February 23 at 1:30 p.m.

Winner of nine film awards, FRAMING THE PANTHERS is the story of the F.B.I.'s covert campaign against the Black Panther party as told through the experience of former Black Panther leader Dhoruba Bin Wahad, who spent over 19 years wrongfully imprisoned as a result of F.B.I. misinformation.

BATTLE & MARSALIS: BAROQUE DUET

The gorgeous voice of soprano Kathleen Battle and the stirring trumpet of Wynton Marsalis join together for a remarkable performance documentary film called BAROQUE DUET, airing Wednesday, February 12 at 10 p.m.

The 90-minute program features Battle and Marsalis performing works by Scarlatti, Handel and Bach. But the film also explores the backgrounds of these two extraordinary artists, capturing Marsalis jamming in a New Orleans jazz club and Battle performing on the steps of her Ohio childhood home.

SONGS OF FREEDOM

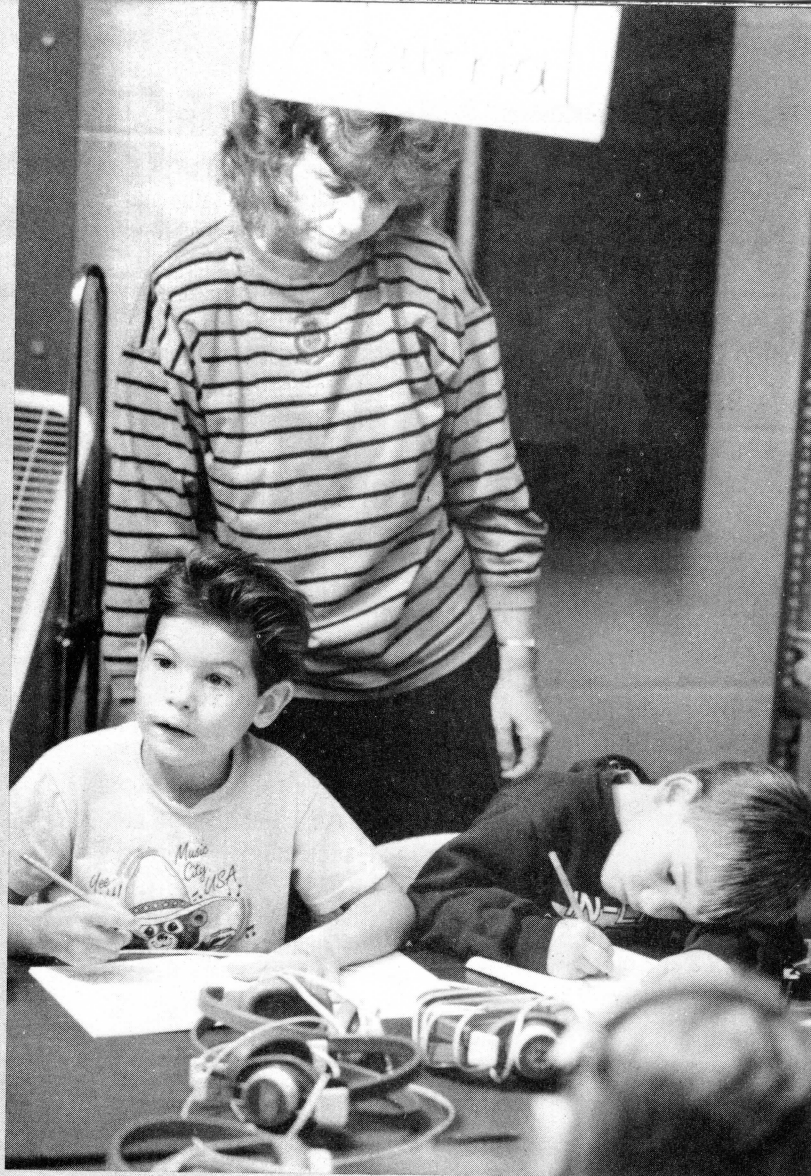

The voices of two legendary performers, folksinger Odetta and soprano Shirley Verrett, together with the Boys Choir of Harlem blend in stirring harmony in SONGS OF FREEDOM, a celebration of the songs of the Civil War and the Civil Rights movement. The special airs Wednesday, February 19 at 8:30 p.m. and Saturday, February 22 at 8 p.m.

This EVENING AT POPS special features an exhilarating mix of music that spans more than 100 years of the American pursuit of freedom. Highlights of the program include Odetta's moving performances of the traditional songs "Black Woman" and "Woke up This Morning With My Mind on Freedom"; Verrett's powerful "Battle Hymn of the Republic"; and an all-cast "Freedom Medley" that includes "Keep Your Eyes on the Prize."

Odetta (left) and Shirley Verrett (right) join the Boys Choir of Harlem and John Williams with the Boston Pops Orchestra for an exhilarating performance of songs of the Civil War and the Civil Rights movement.

THE LEARNING AGE

"Knowledge is power." Sir Francis Bacon said that over 500 years ago. That's also a recurring theme running through a new documentary produced by Channels 45/49. Find out what students, parents, adult learners and educators really want from their schools in THE LEARNING AGE, Wednesday, February 26 at 8 p.m.

Orin Pierce is 16 years old and a sophomore at Cuyahoga Falls High School. He has been expelled from school many times, once for selling drugs to a fellow student, several times for violent behavior. His attendance history is poor and his academic record worse.

Orin looks the part, too. He wears a denim jacket with the sleeves cut off, and his arms display a few tatoos. He is a big, tough-looking kid from — what else — a dysfunctional family with a history of violence and emotional abuse.

Until about a year ago, Orin's future looked very bleak. "When I was expelled last year, I didn't plan on going back," he says.

But a dramatic change has taken place, and it all started when Orin went to a principal at the school and announced, "I'm in trouble and I need some help. I need to do something about this." In that moment, Orin changed the course of his life. He has since entered therapy and discovered that he has goals, that he wants to do something with his life.

And he's discovered that staying in school and getting good grades will help him reach those goals.

"Over the past year, he's found a reason to finish high school and learn," says John Schleup, Orin's therapist. When Orin said he wanted to go into the Navy, Schleup told him he needed a high school diploma. For Orin, education is now a means to an end.

This is one of several personal stories told in THE LEARNING AGE, a new documentary produced by Channels 45/49. The 90-minute special airs Wednesday, February 26 at 8 p.m. THE LEARNING AGE is not another boring study of school board politics and levy battles and education crises. It's not another death knell ringing for the American education system.

Instead, the special is a tapestry of personal stories woven together to help us understand why we — parents, youngsters, adult learners and educators — value education and what we expect from the system. What viewers take away from THE LEARNING AGE is that, of all the reasons we value and pursue knowledge, the most important is that it empowers us. Simply put, an education can help us get what we want, whether it's access to the military, a high-powered career or integration into a foreign culture. Or something as simple as buying a wedding ring for a spouse.

That's what helped motivate James Martin to pursue his General Educational Development (GED) degree.

James and Charlotte Martin of Youngstown dropped out of high school to get married. They have struggled ever since. Without high school diplomas, finding good, steady work to support their six children is almost impossible. At 37, James Martin has never held a job in his life.

"I never finished high school and I didn't think I needed a GED to find work, which I found out wasn't true," explains James. "I was into a lot of things in the streets. And it got to a point I wasn't getting anywhere." Says Charlotte, "When I was in school,

I fooled around, I played around, and that's not where it's at. And now I see that I messed up and I'm trying to regroup, get my life back together again."

In an effort to do just that, James and Charlotte enrolled in a GED program. They've worked hard, and it's paying off. James passed his GED in November. Now, he says, "I want to be into the arts and so for me to be good at it I have to go to college so that I can prepare to be better. And come out with a nice job maybe."

Besides getting a good job to support his family, James has another reason for pursuing his degree: "I wasn't working at the time [Charlotte and I] married. It's been 18 years we've been together. She bought the rings for herself and me. I was never able to buy her a ring. I had no money. I'd just like to do that for her because I love her. She deserves it."

People are motivated by all kinds of goals to get an education, but what if you're a student in an environment that doesn't make learning easy?

For most people, inner city schools are synonymous with violence, drugs and chaos. But Buchtel High School, an inner-city school in Akron, is defying that stereotype. Thanks to a progressive principal, a committed teaching staff and a determined body of students, this school is redefining education in the big city.

Sandra Stubbs, the principal of Buchtel and a 25-year veteran of the education system, was raised in Cleveland and attended an inner-city Catholic school. "I attended a school in which encouragement was not given to minority children," explains Stubbs. "We were told that we couldn't make it, through body language, through the presentation of the lesson. And I remember wanting to advance and being told that, well, you're not above average."

Children are often discouraged for life by such treatment, but it only strengthened Stubbs' desire for success. "I began to work very hard to disprove that theory," she says. "I was determined that, if I could ever rise above it, that I would come back one day and make sure that it did not happen to other young people." And that's exactly what she's doing today.

Under Stubbs' guiding hand, Buchtel has changed significantly. First, the school realized that, in order for young people to learn, they must operate in an environment conducive to learning. That's why the police patrol the halls of this school. They keep insiders in and outsiders where they belong — outside. Most students and teachers welcome the police's presence.

Now that the school has been made safe for education, teachers help students by giving them hands-on experience. In a business class, students really do business. They operate the high school bookstore on their own. Mrs. Shriver, their teacher, just supervises. She says, "The majority of kids want to be successful. It's important that every student experiences success."

The students are responding positively to the respect teachers and administrators show them. Ask the students how they feel about their principal and the way their school is run, and you'll hear some very encouraging answers. "To me she brings a lot of love and caring. If she didn't care, she'd let us do anything we want," says one young man. Another student reports, "It seems like Buchtel is more of a family because she tries to draw us all together." And another student adds, "When I see people doing wrong, I think it's bad. School is a place for learning."

THE LEARNING AGE introduces viewers to all kinds of

The rich, colorful stories of ancient civilizations born in Iraq, India, China, Egypt and Central America are told by host and writer Michael Wood in LEGACY. In this interview, Wood talks about how the series came to be, what it was like to travel the world researching the project and what impact he hopes the series has on viewers.

Wood's previous PBS series include ART OF THE WESTERN WORLD and IN SEARCH OF THE TROJAN WAR.

civilization in the West, we know remarkably little about the other great civilizations. And not all of them are dead — some of them, like China and India, are still alive and still have deep connections with their ancient past.

And having traveled around the globe for many years, I started to feel that the most cataclysmic impact in history really has been the Western impact. We were the only civilization that went out to the whole world partly by historical accident, partly by our own character.

Columbus really is the symbolic beginning of the West's rise to the domination of the whole world, and the impact has been absolutely cataclysmic in every country. In this century, the dust is now starting to settle. And in the next century, with the global crisis of environment and ecology and everything, we really are looking to a new way of conducting politics, I think.

And so you really have to look into the past for answers; the West doesn't have all the answers.

Q: Why did you make this series?

Michael Wood: The more I traveled I became convinced that, although we're such a cosmopolitan and international Q: You focus on five civilizations in this series — Iraq, India, Egypt, China and Central America. Why these? How did you define civilization?

MW: Civilization is very, very difficult to define. It has connotations of one culture being superior to another and so on, which is very dangerous to deal with. It doesn't imply a higher quality of spiritual life or anything like that.

Historians and archaeologists define civilization by life in cities and a whole series of related qualities, like bureaucracies, mass communication, big ceremonial buildings and so on. What they're saying is that the revolution that happened to the human race 5,000 years ago with the first cities in Iraq is the revolution that led to our way of life, which is now crossing the whole of the globe.

The experiment in which humanity started to live in cities happened five times independently on our planet. So really we took five places where this great experiment happened.

Q: You filmed LEGACY in unusual locations and sacred places. Was it difficult?

MW: It is difficult to do because you've got to have the perseverance to get them to let you go there in the first place. You've got to have the energy to actually take you and your film crew off into the wilds. You may have to sleep in a real two-bit kind of dog house. You've got to be prepared to go out into the desert, sleep in village huts or things like that. It's a question of whether you've got the energy to go and do that, or the will to do it. And of course, that's where the really great insights come, not from the tourist places.

We got the length and breadth of Iraq and as far as we know, we're the only Western film crew who ever has been able to do that. This was before the war — about seven months before the invasion of Kuwait. The war has had a cataclysmic effect on Iraq. All of it has been changed irrevocably. Some of the places we filmed will never be the same again.

Q: In LEGACY you portray these civilizations and suggest that they continue regardless of 100 years of British rule or 40 years of Communist rule.

MW: We all watched JEWEL IN THE CROWN and all this stuff about the British Empire. But actually, if you go to India regularly, the dust is already settling and the India that was there before is still there now.

We're so obsessed by short term history. But look at what's happening at the moment — how monolithic we thought the Soviet empire was, and how swiftly it has collapsed. The underlying identity of people in Latvia or Lithuania or in the Ukraine has proven stronger than a system that was a world power.

In China, it's the same. You look at what the Communists did over 40 years and you think it's impossible for delicate traditions to survive, but the moment things loosen up they emerge, they come out.

And so, one of my arguments in the film is that you have to understand a deeper sort of history to understand anything that's going on now.

Q: What were your goals in creating LEGACY?

MW: I've worked on many different kinds of films over the years. I did GREAT RAILWAY JOURNEYS and RIVER JOURNEYS for the BBC that were shown on PBS. I've done straight political documentaries and archaeological films. I wanted LEGACY to be a combination. I wanted the series to have the appeal of travel films, so you can see the most fantastic things. But I wanted them also to have dramatic narrative, so that you're not just giving them facts but you're engaging them with the struggle of this civilization to define its vision of what society should be, and that you're touched by it, at the end, by what's happened to it in history.

Q: You take a strong stand about civilization and nature and how they must interact.

MW: I think everybody knows how now that we're in trouble, and the trouble has come about through our kind of society. Our form of society is individualistic. Americans really need to wake up because Americans consume 25 percent of the world's oil. What we view as our natural freedom in the West will not be possible anymore. It may not be in our lifetime, but in the end a lot of these things won't be possible anymore. There are great glories to our Western tradition and in the final film you'll see how all these arguments come together. The world is now beginning to recognize major problems with the environment, resources and population. And therefore it is important to look at the great alternative traditions that have tried to find a balance between the collective and the individual. We've gone overboard on individual rights. And it's the older civilizations like Asia that have things to tell us about this.

Q: What do you hope viewers will take away from LEGACY?

MW: I'd like them, first of all, to take away a feeling of joy of having shared a little bit of time with these wonderful people in these fantastic places that we've filmed. And to be touched by the way other people see the world, because what we need now more than anything is a sympathetic insight and feeling for other cultures. And on another level, I'd like them to think, well, maybe we in the West haven't got all the answers.

Q: One final question: Did you really climb all the way up that pyramid in the Egypt episode?

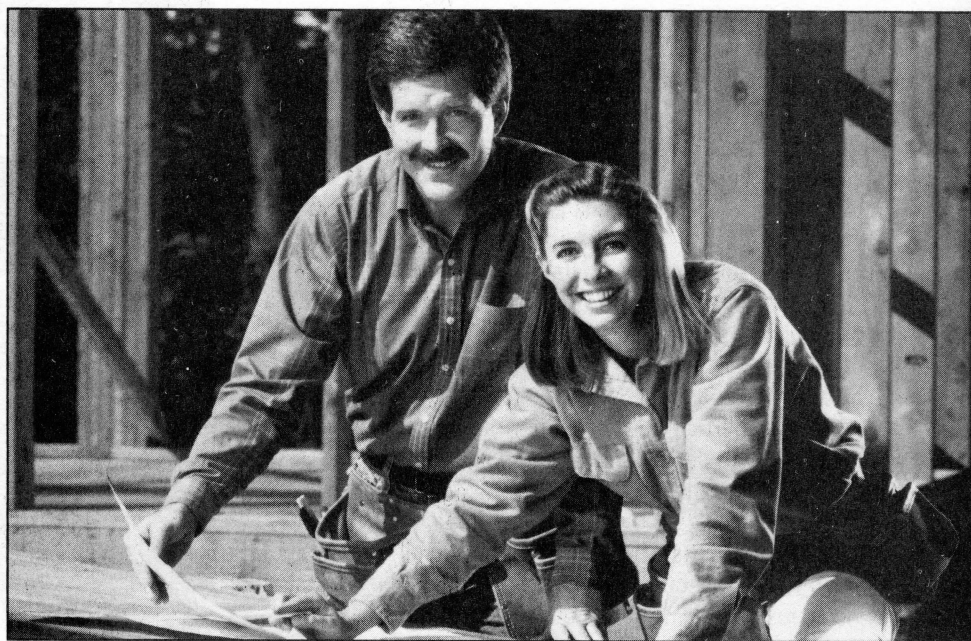

MW: I certainly did. More than once. We carried all the camera gear up as well. And we carried it back down in the darkness.

You have to understand a deeper sort of history to understand anything that's going on now.

Party with "Sesame Street Live" Muppets — for free!

What could be better than watching your fuzzy buddies on SESAME STREET? Having a party with them — in person!

Channels 45/49 have 100 tickets to give away for SESAME STREET LIVE's "Silly Dancing" performance at Youngstown's Powers Auditorium on Sunday, February 23 at 4:30 p.m.

Along with free tickets to the performance, we're offering members the opportunity to bring their little fans to a preshow party at 3 p.m. at Powers to meet the SESAME STREET LIVE characters. We'll eat some cookies. We'll drink some milk. We'll mingle with the stars and shake Muppet hands!

The SESAME STREET LIVE characters will come out to meet the kids and pose for pictures. Bring your camera. It's an event you'll want to record on film.

Ticket availability is first come, first serve. You know they'll go fast, so act now. Call Lee Moore at (216) 677-4549 to reserve your tickets (limit of four tickets per family).

What exactly is "Silly Dancing"? It's the silliest song and dance show you've ever seen, starring SESAME STREET LIVE favorites like Big Bird, Bert, Ernie and Cookie Monster. You'll also meet Oscar's new girlfriend, Grundgetta, who loves to silly dance — in a crabby sort of way.

When Big Bird asks his friends to demonstrate their silliest dancing talents, the results are hilarious. In true SESAME STREET LIVE fashion, "Silly Dancing" not only entertains but celebrates individual expression.

You can see "Silly Dancing" Thursday, February 20 through Sunday, February 23, but the $2 discount coupon below is good for the February 23, 4:30 p.m. performance only. If you can't get in on the free tickets, take advantage of the savings.

students, including two Japanese boys attending a Mennonite high school in Wayne County because their parents want them to get an American education. Viewers will also hear from the mother of twins with Down's Syndrome who talks about what her hopes are for her daughters. These and many other stories make up THE LEARNING AGE.

Throughout, the message is almost always the same. Learning makes dreams attainable. It helps us take command of our own small worlds and lets us, to some degree, become masters of our own fates.

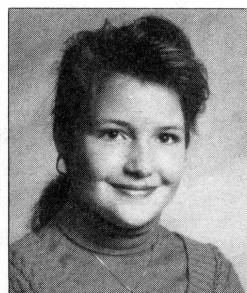

THE LEARNING AGE was produced by Kent State University Teleproductions for Channels 45/49. Executive Producer is Don Freeman. Producers/Directors are David Marc McCoy and Gordon J. Murray. Original music composed by Bill Kist.

Almost 2,000 students vie for chance to compete in game show

Carmen Sandiego contest winners

Six lucky, not to mention geographically well-informed children in northeast Ohio won Channels 45/49's WHERE IN THE WORLD IS CARMEN SANDIEGO? geography contest, earning them the thrill of competing in a live, non-televized performance of the PBS game show on Saturday, January 25.

We're going to press with The Alternative a week before the event, so we can't tell you much (well, actually nothing) about it. But here's a list of our winners.

At Southern Park Mall . . .

- Alex Franzone, a sixth grader at St. Christine's in Youngstown and the son of Karen Franzone of Youngstown and Alex Franzone of New Mexico.

- Ken Smith, a fifth grader at East Palestine Middle School and the son of Sandy Green.

- Carmel Sturgiss, a fifth grader at Poland Middle School and the daughter of David and Pam Sturgiss.

- The alternate was Lee Starr, a fifth grader at H.C. Mines Elementary in Howland and the son of David and Diane Starr.

And at Rolling Acres Mall . . .

- Melissa Clark, a fourth grader at St. Paul's in North Canton and the daughter of Gregory A. and Mary Ann Clark.

- Chuan-Mei Lee, a fourth grader at Leggett Elementary in Akron and the daughter of Kuei-Jen and Gong-Lin Lee.

- David Robinson, a seventh grader at Revere Middle School in Akron and the son of Michael and Cynthia Robinson of Bath Township.

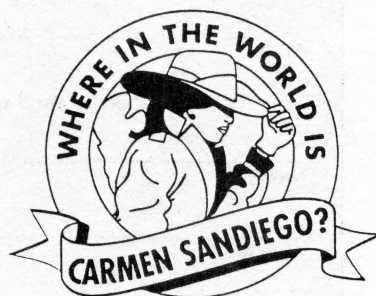

- The alternate was Benjamin Faust, a third grader at Marlboro Elementary in Hartville and the son of Joe Clifford and Connie Faust.

The WHERE IN THE WORLD IS CARMEN SANDIEGO? contest required students to find the answers to ten geography questions. An amazing 1,929 kids did the work required to enter, with 587 submitting completely correct quizzes. From that pool, six winners and two alternates were randomly selected.

The winners and alternates of the contest received the CARMEN SANDIEGO Travel Kit, which included a CARMEN sweatshirt, a CARMEN watch, The Reader's Digest Children's World Atlas, and a subscription to National Geographic's World magazine.

Our thanks to Walden software for helping Channels 45/49 provide t-shirts, buttons and computer software used as giveaway items to the audience members.

Thanks to all of our volunteers

It takes hundreds of volunteers to pull off a membership campaign. Our thanks to everyone who helped sign up 2,499 new members in December.

VOLUNTEER CORNER

Michael Kodysz of Fairview Park is the winner of Channels 45/49's "Design a Volunteer Logo" contest. Judges selected his design from almost 90 entries.

Our winner is a freelance designer and a senior at The University of Akron, where he is completing a degree in graphic design. He found out about our contest through one of his class assignments. Students were asked to design a company logo and were given the option of finding a company on their own or using the Channels 45/49 contest for their project. He, obviously, chose the latter.

His volunteer logo design, Kodysz explains, expresses the relationship between our "institution" (Channels 45/49) and the people who help to make it run — our volunteers. The heavy, bold type of the Channels 45/49 logo and the word "volunteer" works with the handwritten elements — the "t" in volunteer (which looks like a person) and the word "thanks" to reveal how the two — institution and people — work together.

"I wanted the logo to be

Chief engineer John Cervone passes away

John Cervone, Channels 45/49's director of engineering since 1973, passed away in late December. He was 65 years old.

In his 18 years of service, John was instrumental in guiding Channels 45/49 through significant growth and major operational changes. He helped to put both stations on the air, 45 in 1973 and 49 in 1975, and added the Mahoning Valley translator (Channel 58) in 1980. In addition, he oversaw the upgrading of transmitters and other equipment over the past decade, improving the Channels 45/49 signals throughout northeast Ohio and western Pennsylvania.

"We are deeply saddened by John's death," said Bill Glaeser, 45/49's president and general manager. "His passing is a great loss for the stations. With almost 40 years' experience in engineering and electronics, John was an expert in the field and a real asset to our organization."

Before joining Channels 45/49, John worked at WKBN Broadcasting in Youngstown. In addition, he was part owner of Commercial Communications in Canfield and C2S Avionics in North Jackson.

John is survived by his wife, Rosemary, and his four children, Mary Margaret, Deborah Marie, Michael Shawn and John Paul.
